Real Estate Market in Lake Geneva Region remains top tier

Vacancy rate for rental apartments¹ (2017) and absorption risk² (4Q 2017) by canton (abbreviation) or population mobility region, in %

Leasing risk

Low ● ● ● ● ● High

Population size

¹ Vacancy rate for rental apartments based on UBS estimates of rental housing stock

² The absorption risk compares growth in the housing stock (supply) with population growth (potential demand) and indicates whether too much or too little is being built on a regional basis. The increase in supply is determined from the number of building permits requested and issued in the last five to six quarters. Potential growth is estimated based on the past three years of population growth.
